You may place these envelopes in the Offering Box.

Please take an envelope and a gift aid form, available at the entrance.

Spiritual and Conscious Consolations

God continues the existence of this great world in perpetual change, by which day is always succeeded by night, spring by summer, summer by autumn, autumn by winter, and winter again by spring.

Days seldom exactly resemble each other; some are cloudy, others rainy; some dry, others windy, thus causing variety, which adds considerably to the beauty of the universe.

Many priests have touched each of our lives; the priest who baptized us, or received us into the Church, taught us the catechism, gave us our first Holy Communion, heard our Confession and gave us much needed spiritual advice and shared with us the truth of Christ. Generations of priests nourished our forebears with the sacraments of Christ, the fruits of which we continue to receive. And do we not treasure those seminarians who became martyrs here in England during the so-called reformation by whose sacrifice the faith was preserved in this country.

We cannot go back in time to support the education and formation that brought any of these priests through the seminary to the priesthood, but we can help to ensure that there will be generations of priests in the future, and in a small way pay forward in gratitude that which we have freely received.

Although all things change around us, we should remain constantly immovable, ever looking and aspiring towards God.

Let the ship take whatever course it will; let it sail east, west, north or south; let it be driven by any wind whatsoever. The needle of the compass will never point at any other way but towards the bright polar star.

Let all be overturned and disturbed, not only around us, but within us.

Let our soul be overwhelmed with sorrow or joy, sweetness or bitterness, peace or trouble, light or darkness, temptation or repose, pleasure or disgust, dryness or tenderness, whether it be like earth burned by the sun or refreshed by the dew, yet our heart, our spirit, and our superior will, which is our compass, must incessantly tend towards the love of God, its Creator, its Saviour, its only sovereign Good.

“For if we live, we live for the Lord, and if we die, we die for the Lord.” (Romans 14:8)
And, “What will separate us from the love of Christ?” (Romans 8:35)

No nothing shall separate us from this love: neither tribulation, nor anguish, nor death, nor life, nor present grief, nor the fear of the future accidents, nor the artifices of evil spirits, nor the height of consolations, nor the depth of afflictions, nor tenderness, nor dryness ought ever to separate us from this holy love, which is founded in Jesus Christ.

This fixed and absolute resolution never to forsake God, nor to abandon his sweet love,

It is the same with man, who accordingly to the saying of old writers, is an epitome of the universe, or another little world, for he never remains long in one and the same state. His life flows on upon earth like the waters, floating and undulating in a perpetual diversity of motion, which sometimes lifts him up with hope, sometimes brings him down with fear, sometimes carries him to the right hand by consolation, and sometimes to the left by affliction. Not one of his days, not even one of his hours, is in every respect like another.

Now, it is necessary that we should endeavour to preserve an inviolable equality of heart amid so great an inequality of occurrences.

serves as a counterpoise to our souls to keep them in a holy equilibrium amid the inequality of the various motions attached to the condition of this life.

For just as bees, surprised by a storm in the fields, take up little pieces of gravel so that they may be able to balance themselves in the air and not be so easily carried away by the wind, so also our soul, having a strong resolution firmly embraced the precious love of God, continues constant in the midst of the inconstancy and vicissitudes of consolation and afflictions, whether spiritual or temporal, exterior or interior.

The Cure of Ars film for EWTN

Local filmographer, Stefano Mazzeo, is filming locally at Lanherne some scenes for the Cure of Ars docudrama for EWTN and is looking for young extras.

We need about nine girls from the ages of five to sixteen to act as pupils at Vianney's school for girls and orphanage: The Providence. Filming will be Sunday 2nd of June.

Also needed is a girl of fourteen to play St Philomena also in a green screen studio, filming Saturday 1st June.

This is an excellent opportunity for young Catholics to get to know these characters in our Church's history and to be a part of a Catholic film production, which will be shown throughout the world.

Questions and Answers

Our next sessions of Questions and Answers at Lanherne with Canon Smith for anyone who may have questions about the Catholic Faith or Liturgy will be on Wednesday 10th of April at 6.30pm at Lanherne Convent. The session will be about an hour.

Pilgrimage to Italy

Canon Smith is in the beginning stages of planning a Pilgrimage to Italy for October of this year. A tentative itinerary includes stops in Venice, Padua, Florence, the Institute's Seminary in Gricigliano, and of course Rome! If you are interested in joining this Pilgrimage, please let Canon Smith know, there is no commitment needed at this time.
