Why is the Mass celebrated in Latin?

Historically most major religions have had the practice of reserving a special "sacred" language for divine worship. We ought not to be surprised that the Church uses a sacred language for the holy Mass, instead of necessarily using the modern languages employed by people in their daily life. This is a custom which was already known by the Jews of the Old Covenant and which was accepted by Our Lord and his Apostles. In fact, the Jews of Palestine at the time of Our Lord two thousand years ago had already lost the use of the Hebrew tongue several centuries beforehand, during the Exile in Babylon (sixth century B.C.), and so they used a common dialect called Aramaic in their day-to-day life. Nonetheless, for liturgical worship in the Temple they retained the use of Hebrew. The early Church did not continue the custom of using Hebrew as the liturgical language because Christianity had now fulfilled the promises of the Old Law and the old Jewish religious practices were henceforth abrogated. Even so, the Church retained the custom of using a dignified language in her services even though it might not be understood perfectly by the people, first Greek then Latin. As providence led Saint Peter, the first pope, to establish the seat of the Church in Rome, it is understandable that in time Latin, the language of Rome, should become also the language of the Church. The Mass continued to be celebrated in Latin even after the development of modern languages, when Latin was no longer widely spoken. We can follow the translations in our missals, and it is easy to get used to the general parts of the Mass. The Latin tongue not only unites Catholics of all races and backgrounds, but it also unites us across time with our distant ancestors in the faith.
