LITURGY CORNER: KNOW THE MASS

What is origin of the traditional Roman rite of Mass?
{Continued from last time} Drawing upon customs sanctioned by the early popes, the basic form of the Roman Mass was well established by the time of Pope St. Gregory the Great (590-604), before being embellished in succeeding centuries, especially at the time of Charlemagne (circa 800). In the aftermath of the Protestant Reformation, the Church naturally wished to take special care to guarantee that the sacred liturgy should be celebrated with all due reverence and devotion. In order to correct liturgical abuses, in 1570 Pope St. Pius V published a purified version of the Roman missal (the book containing the prayers of the Mass). Hence the traditional Latin Mass is sometimes – though not entirely accurately – called the ‘rite of St. Pius V’ or the ‘Tridentine Mass’. The word Tridentine comes from the Latin version of the name for Trent, a city in northern Italy. The Council of Trent (1545-1563) met in order to clarify and reiterate Catholic doctrine in the wake of the Protestant revolution of the sixteenth century, as well as to address legitimate practical concerns that had arisen. We must emphasise that the so-called Tridentine missal was not created by the Council of Trent or by St. Pius V but is really much older. The Mass contained in the missal of St. Pius V is simply the Mass as it had been celebrated for many centuries in the papal court at Rome and in the places evangelised by Roman missionaries. The Tridentine reform merely codified the existing liturgy, whose prayers and ceremonies had developed slowly since the time of the first Christians.

The traditional Latin Mass has thus been handed down to succeeding generations of Catholics by popes and saints from the very mists of Christian antiquity. The word ‘traditional’ comes from the Latin word tradere, ‘to hand on,’ and so the traditional Latin Mass is quite simply the form of Mass that has been handed on to us by our ancestors in the faith who have celebrated this Mass the way it developed centuries ago in Rome, at the heart of Christendom. This timeless liturgy is a precious reminder for us that through all the vicissitudes of history, our Mother the Catholic Church is, like Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever.
